ABSTRACT

A study evaluated the effectiveness of the "Word Master in Spelling" program. In it, students study core words on the Ves Thomas "Canadian Spelling Program." Every 6 weeks, they are given a written review test and a proofreading test based on the five units they have completed. In 1981-82, subjects were 160 children in grades K through 7 at a small city school in Canada. The Canadian Test of Basic Skills (CTBS) and the Wide Range Achievement Test were used to guage the results of the program. Because of highly mobile students and high initial scores, the sample population was inadequate for research purposes. Given this problem, the three findings, (1) that students in the program did no better on proofreading tests and worse on written tests than other students; (2) that boys and girls did not differ in achievement; and (3) that higher achievers did more poorly than students outside the program while low achievers did improve, cannot be considered conclusive. Further research on younger and poorer spellers is still needed, as is an analysis of the gaps evident between performance on written spelling and proofreading tests. (The appendix, which makes up the bulk of the document, includes copies of the tests used, tables of results, the proofreading program, and a bibliography.) (JL)

EVALUATION OF IMPLEMENTING PROOFREADING

INTO THE

SCHOOL SPELLING PROGRAM

by Kathy Caisley

Report No. 327

Financial support for the project was provided through a grant from the Educational Institute of B.C.

For some years, teachers have understood that the mastery of weekly spelling lists does not necessarily make a student into a good speller. Not knowing the best way to correct this situation, teachers have tried various methods of motivating and individualizing the instruction of spelling. A recent review of the literature disclosed as in Ganschow (1981),Leeson (1977), Schwartz (1977), and Wertemberger (1977), that many suggestions abound.

Research has given some guidelines as to what is and what is not effective in spelling instruction. But often, as Personke and Yee (1971) state, "in spite of the concern ... there appears to be evidence that instructional practices continue to be influenced far more by habit than by research evidence."

Through various studies, we now know the most efficient length of spelling instruction (Greene, 1971),that the pupil should mark his own tests (Greene, 1971), that "test study" is the most effective study method (Personke, 1971), and that instruction in the use of the dictionary is only useful when combined with spelling (Personke, 1971).

Research on teaching proofreading in spelling, however, is inconclusive (Bishop, 1965; Oswalt, 1962; McElwee, 1975 and Ebel, 1969). Programs for teaching children to proofread or proofspell are few. We would assume, as in many areas of instruction, that for a proofreading program to be most useful and effective, it would be a school-wide program and be highly motivating.

Upon realizing the need for instructional materials on proofreading, the author with the assistance of the staff of her school, devised a proofreading element to accompany the Ves Thomas Canadian Spelling Program, a B.C. authorized spelling text used as the basic program in S.D. #59.

When analyzed for proofreading exercises, the Canadian Spelling Program contained proofreading passages in 22.22% - 55.55% (Table 1) of its units. Some units contained unscrambling exercises which the author did not include as proofreading. These proofreading exercises were usually found in the "Extending Skills" section and not in the regular word study.

The experimental proofreading program was called Word Master in Spelling. In the early fall of 1981, two staff meetings were devoted to the teaching methods of the Canadian Spelling Program and to explain how the Word Master in Spelling would work. The students were to study the core words on the Ves Thomas Canadian Spelling Program. Every six weeks the students were to be given the written review test and a proofreading test based on the five units just completed. These proofreading tests were developed by the author on the same format of the spelling subtest of the C.T.B.S. because the students were familiar with this test. If a pupil obtained 90% on both the written and the proofreading tests, s/he became a Word Master for that period. If needed, the child would be given two attempts to attain the 90% in either the written or the proofreading test. But s/he must have achieved 90% in both before qualifying for the Word Master in Spelling Certificate. Children who qualified for the certificate in all six review units would have their names engraved on a Word Master in Spelling plaque.

This Word Master in Spelling program was carried out in a small city school of 8.3 teachers and approximately one hundred and sixty children enrolled in grades from kindergarten to seven. This school is in an area where the main industry is service to farming and oil. The socio-economic level of the children's families is middle class with some lower class. There were approximately twenty rural students bussed to the school. The classes were self-contained and no team teaching was done in the 1981-82 year in the language arts area. There was some provision for six gifted students but this was not aimed specifically at the language arts area. There were no identified severely emotionally handicapped or retarded children in the group.

After running the program from October until early May[1], the author wanted to find out:

1. if the program was in place
2. if the program significantly altered the expected progress of the children
3. if, given the small sample size, any inferences could be drawn from the test results
   a) boy achievement - girl achievement
   b) high achiever (75 percentile) - low achiever(25 percentile)

TESTS USED

The author used two test to gauge the results: The Canadian Test of Basic Skills (Spelling Subtest) and the Wide Range Achievement Test (Level I Spelling). First, the 1980-81 grade five and six C.T.B.S. raw spelling scores were compared to the 1981-82 grade five and six raw spelling scores. Secondly, grades two to six were given a pretest W.R.A.T. spelling subtest Level I in October 1981 and a post-test W.R.A.T. in May 1982.

Problems in Evaluation of the Program and Test Results

The program was in place by year-end and most of the classes completed the six lists. However, by post-test time only four or five of the lists had been finished. Some differences in results may have occurred if the children had completed all the six list tests.

[1] C.T.B.S. testing in the district is done at that time.

There was some uncertainty about the program at the outset and, again, results may have been altered if more time had been allotted for teacher familiarity with the program.

Our sample population was inadequate for research purposes in two aspects. First, the pupils are highly mobile. Only 50% of the students who began grade 5 at the school completed grade 6 at the school. Only 43% of the students who began grade 6 at the school completed grade 7 at the school. In addition, approximately 40% of the students are scoring at the 75 percentile or above.

Did the program significantly alter the expected progress of the children?

As a group, when compared to students who did not have proofspelling instruction (Table 2 and 3) the students on the proofspelling program did no better on proofspelling type tests. It appears that there was a decreasing gain in written spelling tests (Table 9) and this gain was lower than expected for all but grade 2. The gains in proofspelling ability were not transferred to written spelling. (Table 11)

Given the small sample size, can any inferences be drawn from boy achievement - girl achievement?

No differences in achievement could be deduced from either the proofspelling tests or the written spelling tests. (Tables 7,8,10)

Given the small sample size, can any inferences be drawn from high achiever (75 percentile) or low achiever (25 percentile) groups?

It appears that the number of students scoring at the 75 percentile or above declines (Table 4). The high achievers on the proofspelling program also had poorer results than those who were not on the program (Table 5).

The results of the children who scored at the 25 percentile are less conclusive but indicate that the program may help when the students are given proofreading type spelling tests. (Table 6)

Recommendation on Program

Before the program could be recommended for use, it should be tested again with a larger, more stable and more typical (average) population.

Further research stemming from this proofspelling program may include:

1. the addition of weekly proofspelling for younger and/or poorer spellers. That is, give the weekly list in the same form as the proofspelling test.

2. an analysis of our observation that some spellers who do well on written tests have problems with the proofreading type spelling tests and that some spellers who do poorly on written tests are more successful at proofreading spelling tests.

Directions: The exercises in this spelling test are like the samples shown at the right. Many of the exercises contain a mistake in spelling. Some do not have any mistakes at all.

You are to look for mistakes in spelling. When you find a mistake, fill in the answer space on the answer sheet that has the same number as the word which is wrong. If there is no mistake in an exercise, fill in the fifth answer space.

The sample exercises at the right show what you are to do.
